Landrum & Brown (L&B), founded in 1949, is a highly respected global airport and aviation planning consultancy that has grown from a two-person firm to approximately 115 employees in 17 offices worldwide. With clients on five continents, L&B specializes in all forms of airport and aviation planning, including facilities and operations, terminal, environmental, cargo, and financial planning at airports of all sizes worldwide. L&B's most valuable asset is our employees and their passion for their work.

L&B has been actively involved with cooperative education programs dating back to 1967, supporting and relying on co-op programs at UC and other universities. Co op students from varied curriculums are introduced to a fast-paced, hands-on professional environment that integrates students into diversified complex projects using state-of-the-art technical resources, while being mentored by L&B's top experts.

Many of L&B's staff are UC alumni, some whom started their career with the UC co-op program and have risen to management levels. Several of these former UC Co-ops regularly speak at UC classes and serve on UC program advisory boards. The supervisors at L&B provide excellent professional development, teaching, and mentoring for their co-op employees. L&B's Employer evaluations show a comprehensive and supportive approach to providing feedback. This approach pays off in that not only has L&B achieved an excellent reputation among current students, but the firm has hired many co-op employees. There is no better testimony than for a graduate student to choose to start their formal career with a previous co-op employer!
